Notes on the Contributors

Clare Coombe

completed her PhD, Claudian the Poet: Poetology, Myth, and Story-Telling, at the University of Reading in 2012, examining the way in which Claudian uses poetics to convey political propaganda. She now works for St Albans Cathedral, teaching and managing their Study Centre. She retains a research interest in Late Antique and early Christian Latin poetics.

Roald Dijkstra

is a Postdoctoral Researcher and Lecturer at Radboud University Nijmegen, the Netherlands. In 2014, he defended his dissertation, entitled Portraying Witnesses: The Apostles in Early Christian Art and Poetry at the same university. He also participates in Gymnasmata, a project of Leiden University, for which he develops Latin teaching material.

Bertrand Lançon

is Professor of Roman History at the Université de Limoges, France, with a main focus on illness, medicine and imperial power in Late Antiquity. After earlier books such as Rome in Late Antiquity (New York, 2001), he has recently published Constantin (Paris, 2012, with T. Moreau) and Théodose (Paris, 2014), and will soon publish a French translation of Marcellinus' Chronicle. His next books will concern The 'Noso-World' of Late Antiquity and Failures in Late Roman Imperial Etiquette.

Morwenna Ludlow

is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Exeter. She has published widely on the church fathers and their modern reception, including Gregory of Nyssa, Ancient and (Post)modern (Oxford, 2007). Her survey, The Early Church (London, 2009) has been well-received. She is currently working on a project aimed at reconceiving the way in which scholars view early Christian writers' use of rhetoric.

Neil McLynn

specializes in the political and religious history of Late Antiquity. Since 2007 he has been University Lecturer in Later Roman History at Oxford University, and a fellow of Corpus Christi College. He was previously Professor in the Faculty of Law at Keio University, Japan. His publications include Ambrose of Milan: Church and Court in a Christian Capital (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1994) and Christian Politics and Religious Culture in Late Antiquity (Aldershot, 2009).

Sigrid Mratschek

is Professor of Ancient History at the University of Rostock, Germany, Member of the Council of the International Association of Patristic Studies, and Consulting Editor of the Journal of Late Antiquity. Her present research focuses on creative elites in the Roman empire and Late Antiquity. Her book on wealth and social standing under the Principate (Stuttgart, 1993) was awarded the Bruno Heck Prize. She is also author of Der Briefwechsel des Paulinus von Nola (Göttingen, 2002) and of numerous essays on epistolography (Sidonius Apollinaris, Paulinus, Augustine and Pliny) written during and since her Visiting Fellowship at All Souls College, Oxford, in 2012.

Lieve Van Hoof

is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at Ghent University, Belgium. She has published a monograph on Plutarch's Practical Ethics: The Social Dynamics of Philosophy (Oxford, 2010), an edited volume entitled Libanius: A Critical Introduction (Cambridge, 2014), and a series of articles that examine the relation between literature and society in the second and fourth centuries AD. Currently, she is preparing a monograph on the letters of Libanius.

Peter Van Nuffelen

is Professor of Ancient History at Ghent University, Belgium, with a particular interest in late antique history, historiography and literature, and in Greco-Roman religion. His recent publications include Rethinking the Gods: Philosophical Readings of Religion in the Post-Hellenistic Period (Cambridge, 2011) and Orosius and the Rhetoric of History (Oxford, 2012).

Mark Vessey

is Principal of Green College and Professor of English at the University of British Columbia. A collection of his essays on late Roman literary culture appeared as Latin Christian Writers in Late Antiquity and their Texts (Aldershot, 2005). He is the editor of A Companion to Augustine (Malden, 2012) in the series of Blackwell Companions to the Ancient World, and is currently preparing his 2013 Bristol Blackwell Lectures ("Writing before Literature: Later Latin Scriptures and the Memory of Rome") for publication.

John Weisweiler

is Marie-Curie-Fellow at the Universities of Chicago (USA) and Heidelberg (Germany) and lecturer at the University of Basle (Switzerland). His main interest is in the social, cultural and economic history of late-antique élites. He is currently completing a book on the senatorial aristocracy of the Later Roman Empire.
